This work is focused on four major areas of investigation: (1) We have shown that a T cell antigen specific for the self antigen P2Na-P2Ca can be found in patients with disseminated T cell lymphoma and have developed an in vitro assay for the P2Na-P2Ca antigen. An effective cellular immune response to this antigen is not found in patients with the antibody deficiency syndrome, X-linked agammaglobulinemia or in nude mice. In contrast, we have found that XLA can be reconstituted in nude mice by adoptive transfer of in vitro expanded lymphocytes from this disorder. (2) We have isolated the gene encoding the low-affinity receptor for IgM and investigated its role in B cell differentiation. (3) We have developed a mouse model of autoimmune diabetes in which insulin-reactive T cells from the NOD mouse recognize peptides from human glutamic acid decarboxylase (GAD). The recent production of transgenic mice overexpressing GAD mRNA is allowing an investigation of the epitope specificity of the pathogenic GAD-reactive T cells in beta cells in the islets of transgenic mice. We have also characterized the T cells which recognize these epitopes and found that some are autoreactive T cells. (4) We have characterized the T cell antigen receptor expressed by a retinoblastoma-specific T cell clone and found a unique V, D and J gene segment utilization. Using this information we have begun to map the location of the tumor-specific antigen on this precursor cell.
