The new official website of Blender Foundation is at: The homepage for the website has not been changed yet, but you can see more information about the team, the roadmap, and the new developments. However, the real magic starts from the archive section. There you see the history of Blender over time. The world's best software simulation and rendering software is still growing, with the support from developers from all over the world. You can not only keep up-to-date by reading updates about the software, but also get news about the open source software, events and competitions. Don't miss the chance to follow news about Blender from the developers themselves. Blender as a world-wide recognized developer Open source is the next step to open games industry. As a result of the work of volunteers and community, the world's most popular 3D renderer Blender has gained broad acceptance among the community, especially for artists and developers. Blender is the only renderer that has not only an open source license like Creative Commons, but has also been accepted as a true alternative for the movie industry. Although Blender still is not well known in the gaming industry, it is gaining popularity among non-professional users and professionals alike. The CEO of Frozenbyte said that Blender is used more frequently than he expected. And a large number of projects such as games and movies or the industry itself now rely on Blender. Those are the new developments about Blender Foundation that you can find on its new website and the archive page. New components will be released to the community on a regular basis. Blender Foundation will be releasing BlenderCookie.org with more components in the future. In the context of this release, new components will be launched on the BlenderCookie.org website. You can also see several changes to the BlenderCookie.org website. We wish you a good download. For the first time in our lives, modern science has actually found a way to end all wars, poverty, starvation and the degradation of our planet. Scientists have been working on a technology that will revolutionize space travel and make the journey to the stars safe and affordable. This new technology is called Warp Drive, and in recent years several high ranking scientists and military officials have verified that it can be used to travel at FTL speeds.
