superdwnld.comQ: Detecting background picture in Windows Is there a way to detect if the background picture is present on the computer? I can't find anything related to this. I need to know that so I can set the background picture on my Windows 7 machine. Thanks. A: The question is very broad, but you could try to look in the registry. Or you could use WMI (Windows Management Instrumentation). Another way is to use the "Never show this image again" option for the background picture. This has the effect of removing the background picture, thus the background picture may now be reported as being "not present". If you remove the desktop.ini file in C:\Users\your username)\AppData\Roaming\Microsoft\Windows\Start Menu\Programs\Startup then this item is no longer checked by Windows to remember the picture you selected for the background. Vector Magic Desktop Edition v1.15 Crack Portable.Q: Unix env variables for execution of a application to test against local configuration I would like to create a simple application which executes a specific configuration. Normally for testing purposes I would assume the correct runtime environment is available, but in this particular case it seems that it is not. I am running a Xen-based CentOS 6.2 VM, and trying to test a Perl script as one of the applications. So I've created the directory /opt/perl/lib/perl5/site_perl/5.10.1/ and copied the Perl script (called test.pl) from this particular directory to the current directory. However, whenever I try to execute the script like the following I get a Missing ENVIRONMENT error: $ perl test.pl Missing ENVIRONMENT variable I've created the .profile (or .bash_profile, whatever I should use in this particular circumstance) file with the following content: export PERL5LIB=/opt/perl/lib/perl5/site_perl/5.10.1/ export PATH=${PATH}:/opt/perl/lib/perl5/site_perl/5.10.1/bin I am using the actual path to the Perl script, because I assume /bin/perl is not the correct location as well. Question: How to correctly set the environment in this case? A: For Perl you generally have to set PERL5LIB to the same directory as your script, so the shell-settings wouldn't work. You can also set $ENV{PERL5LIB} which does the same thing.
