I like to use the default "I quit" solution button (the light bulb with the icon) because it makes my code look cleaner, but is there a way to set that as the default solution for new projects, or for projects I add to existing projects? A: To set the default icon for a dialog, use the Project Properties | Build | Show Case | Icon property. To set the default icon for a dialogless form, use the Project Properties | Build | Show Case | Icon property in the project's.csproj file. Share this... Climate scientist Dr. Ralph Keeling reveals that the CO2 content of the atmosphere is at a record high of over 400 ppm. "The atmosphere has reached levels that haven't been seen for 400,000 years," writes Keeling. Atmospheric CO2 is currently well over 400 ppm for the first time in 400,000 years. pic.twitter.com/YJ8xpFrPJ4 — Ralph Keeling (@raquelaws) May 25, 2018 Julian

Some of the analysis results are stored as an algorithm's output into a data structure, e.g. a hash map. The logic of the hash map storing is the following: First, the file is parsed For each parsed data the hash map is created (allocated to have free memory) Then the hash map is filled with the result of a certain function, which is a "complex" function. This is where the problem comes in, because the complex function is a compiled function of a library. At the end the library's structure is parsed, and the data structure is filled again, using the compiled function from the 1st step. The problem is, that this doesn't work. I have some suspicions that I'm somehow calling the compiled function too early, I'm not sure how to fix it. # this is the "instructions" list instructions = [# this is an example instruction of a library function ['0x6ae92c0d6a803570', 'some arguments', 'key for the hash map', # this is a bytecode function '0xc4d0d31f5ec9c50d'], # and this is a compiled function ['0x6ae92c0d6a803570', 'some arguments', 'key for the hash map', # this is a bytecode function '0xc4d0d31f5ec9c50d'],] So my question is: how would I access a compiled function from a file if I put it outside the library that was used to compile the function? I hope that it's clear enough. Edit: It's a Python 2.7 A: 3da54e8ca3
