A minimalistic GUI application, can act as a tool to simulate a text generator. Get started today with textreme! Domains of Activity Domains of Activity is an effort to address an issue that's all too common to engineers and researchers: when the time comes to describe or document a new system, often a list of domain-specific terms is needed to fully describe the system and allow easier communication with others. Problem Description Domain-specific vocabulary is used all the time. For instance, when describing software that executes on a processor, we talk about instructions, registers, addresses, and so on. When discussing the process of designing hardware, the concepts of chip design and circuit design are used. When talking about specific cryptographic algorithms, we may be using the terms protocol, key length, hash function, entropy, and the like. When describing the behavior of a software-based system, we may use terms such as signal, user, processes, threads, processes, memory, data, operating system, and so on. In this case, we want to create a vocabulary for a new, specific domain of activity: Domain-specific Vocabularies. We envision a website where any domain of activity can be described, and where visitors can suggest (or even write!) domain-specific terms and definitions. Domain-specific Vocabularies is part of Domains of Activity, and we're starting with the "software" domain. Founded in 2011 by Syston, NuNu is the brainchild of Fredrik Welk. NuNu is a tool that makes it easy for programmers to make use of cross-platform packages like OpenCV, OpenNI, and OpenZWave. While NuNu itself is an open-source project, it leverages the availability of free and open-source libraries from our partners at the Open Source Computer Vision Lab. The NuNu library will allow you to run easy-to-use Python scripts on all the platforms that NuNu supports. We're currently supporting Apple OS X, Windows, and Linux. Affected OSes NuNu works by generating native executable code from Python scripts. This requires the native libraries of the platform that you wish to run your code on.
