What's New in the Apex Free Pocket PC Video Converter?

Apex Free Pocket PC Video Converter is an app developed to convert common video formats to Pocket PC AVI-playable format. There's nothing that could get you too much trouble and the main window of the app takes care of this because it groups all essential options. Apex Free Pocket PC Video Converter can work with MPEG, WMV, DivX, MOV, RM and RMVB, AVI, ASF and DVD files, all of which can be convert to Pocket PC format. Batch conversion is also supported, which means that you can easily convert multiple items at once using the predefined parameters. The same window comprises a preview screen too, while it also shows frame size, output type and status for each file. Apex Free Pocket PC Video Converter incorporates multiple predefined profiles, so you can easily pick the one you want. Additionally, the program gives you the option to change video size, frame rate and auto bitrate for each selected profile. Of course, you don't really need to be an advanced computer user because Apex Free Pocket PC Video Converter requires such basic technical knowledge, especially thanks to the "one window does it all" approach we were talking about. Overall, this is a handy piece of software for all those who want to convert videos to Pocket PC with minimum effort. It groups all options in just one window and doesn't hamper system performance in any way.

Q: Conflict of global variable in JavaScript Please see the code below: `var a = 0; var b = 0; var x = 1; function f(){ a = 0; b = 0; var x = 1; x = 2; } f(); console.log(a,b);` The answer of this code is "undefined undefined". But I want to get "1 1" as the answer. Is there any method to solve this?

A: You need to call your f() function like `f(); console.log(a,b);` because in the inner scope b is not available to f(). f is not "global" by definition, so it should be called like this.

A: By default, a function's scope is the local variable namespace of the function. This means that b is only accessible inside f.
