Whale Shark Facts Believe it or not, there is a creature that lives right here in the United States. It is a whale shark that, although it is not found in every state, can be found in all of the Gulf coast states. And, just like sharks, whale sharks are more of a cat than a dog. These sharks are not just any sharks; in fact they are the largest living fish species in the world. Like all sharks, they have a very basic diet, consisting of mostly tiny fish, plankton and shrimp. But unlike sharks, these fish are not a threat to the health of any mammals; in fact most mammals love them and would be happy to swim with them. However, because of the size of these fish, they do pose a threat to the health of humans. They may deliver some nasty parasites, bacteria, or even diseases to their human caretakers, or passengers. To be safe when visiting a whale shark you should use the following precautions: Protect your eyes: The sharks do not have eyelids; keep your eyes closed when with these enormous creatures. Watch where your hands and feet are: Tiny fish and invertebrates will, and do, swim onto your feet and hands. Be careful of the pinch points on your feet and hands. Be careful of splashes: If you have been swimming, the water may still be hot and you may get a sunburn. For this reason, it is not always safe to swim with whale sharks. Do not touch: Do not touch the sharks as it may be harmful to you. Also, do not touch their mouths. Keep dry: Be careful not to be splashed by the sharks' spray. Stay out of the water: Do not put yourself in a situation where you may have to be rescued, if need be. Call for help: If you see a shark near your boat or want someone to call for assistance, call the NOAA "Swimmer's Aide".
