Description of the Related Art U.S. Pat. No. 7,319,391 B2 describes a connector provided with a hood which is accommodated in a cavity of a housing of the connector. The hood is pivotally supported on the housing, and can be brought into and out of contact with an opposing connector. A first and a second lance are provided in the hood. The first lance is formed to protrude toward the first connector via a lance receiving hole formed in the housing, and the second lance is provided in the cavity of the housing in the second connector, and is supported to be tiltable relative to the housing. When the first and second connectors come into contact with each other, the first and second lances are pressed against each other by the first and second connectors, respectively. The second lance is provided in the cavity of the housing. Therefore, the entire area of the housing increases even when the second lance is not provided. The housing does not sufficiently shorten in the direction of the depth.Q: Troubles with AsyncFile in WinRT/Windows 8 I'm trying to migrate a Winforms app to Windows 8 (c#, xaml). The app uses a class that inherits from AsyncFile and calls ReadFileAsync (bytes[], long count). Unfortunately, a problem occurs when the app is running in the store. The app is supposed to work offline with the device, and

Designed by Simeon King Stone, the house was built in 1880. It was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1985 and on the State Register of Historic Places in 1989. Originally, the house was constructed of brick and trimmed in stone. In the early 1900s, it was expanded to include a "tower" on the west, and a new roof was put on the house. The tower was removed in the late 1950s. Stone was a prominent local architect and builder, and was born in Watertown. The house is no longer standing. The house is considered a contributing property in the Simeon King Stone Historic District.
