The Sunken Gardens Aquarius donates tons of food, gets Gardening Help By: Amy C. Bilski, Director of Communications On Saturday, May 8, a group of juniors from the University of Delaware organized a clean-up day at the Delaware Sunken Gardens, which was more serious than most Saturday morning cleans on campus. The group of neatly coifed and perfectly spaced-out students worked to remove dead and decaying plants and air plants in order to keep the gardens clean. "We had to sort through dead branches," said sophomore Joshua William III. "The branches and bushes are under a lot of pressure, so we had to pick them up and take them out." After a few hours of work, the teenagers said that they did a good job, but they admit that there was a lot of trash to be picked up still. The group of juniors helped organize the clean-up day because a few of them participated in the Annual Garden Home Makeover Program (GHMP), which takes place in the garden on Thursdays. This program is run by Aquarius, a student club on campus that provides socially disadvantaged and environmentally conscious students with a venue for practicing responsible environmental citizenship. Aquarius organizes clean-up days for the gardens on Mondays and Saturdays so that it can help to keep the gardens a beautiful environment. "Before this year, I never realized how big the garden is; I had no idea that there were so many plants there," said Sophomore Jason Stowers, one of the students that helped organize the clean-up day. "Aquarius did a great job of setting up recycling and stuff like that so that we didn't have to add any more trash to the garden. Overall, I think we did a pretty decent job." According to Audrey Lucente, president of the community-based club Aquarius, the GHMP is a community service model that helps to teach students about the importance of sustainable living through gardening. "The best thing about the program is that students learn about gardening in the gardens," she said. "At first, the three main goals of the program were to raise awareness and promote awareness of the garden. Then, we wanted to expand the knowledge of the students with our goal of making the garden a unique experience for our members and our students. We bring in speakers from Europe and Britain, and we even have seeds from different countries around the world, which include items
