The unit – which continues to rapidly grow – has appeared to be many Twitter followers ahead of the company's banning of thousands of accounts it believed to have been central in ISIS propaganda following its use of the social media site as an outlet for its extremist views. Though the article states that the accounts had been first started by Ponzi schemes, the hacker was actually "responsible for devising the app that was sending out the tweets," it said. Twitter revealed in May of the 4,791 suspended accounts it believed to have been part of the abuse, many of which were on claim to be solely tweeting in favour of ISIS, while
