“Unlike previous versions of FIFA, we asked ourselves the very important question, 'what makes the real-life athletes on the pitch so exceptional?’” said David Rutter, Senior Producer at EA Sports. “We wanted to create a more authentic experience by capturing the movement of soccer players in motion. So we used the same technology that we use to capture and animate our players, the same motion capture data, directly from players on the pitch.” Motion capture data of real-life players are captured in a lab where the data is translated into facial animations for players, and match actions, such as the timing of tackles, header, passes, shots and decisions. Each player’s movement and actions are then converted into the complex movements of a high-level athlete in game. This enables FIFA 22 to feature players who are physically fit and strong using “visual fidelity” based on motion capture data, creating more realistic and fluid animations of these players. The motion capture data that was used to create the authentic player movement in FIFA 22 was recorded during high-intensity, full-speed matches with top professional soccer players including David Beckham, Lionel Messi, Neymar Jr., Eric Cantona, Alexis Sánchez, Philippe Coutinho and Cristiano Ronaldo. As with other FIFA titles, the 22 top professional players from around the world have been given unique ratings and attributes. “In FIFA 20, we reimagined our iconic players using the technology of today,” said Andrew Yip, Senior Producer at EA Sports. “We’re excited to bring ‘HyperMotion Technology’ to FIFA 22 with real-life players, enabling authentic, challenging, and visually-imperative gameplay.” “We are honored to continue our relationship with EA Sports for the FIFA series,” said Kunto. “‘HyperMotion Technology’ brings FIFA 22 to a new level of authentic player motion in video games.” In addition, FIFA 22 introduces environmental authenticity by leveraging on-pitch player behavior data collected by sensors installed on goal nets and soccer balls used in the series’ top 22 professional leagues. This data is used to enhance player behavior in the player-driven Football Environment; adding more authentic data to affect player behavior in gameplay, and making it a more realistic challenge. Beside the new highly-detailed visuals of players and environments, new
