Gpg4win Light aims at helping users to encrypt their files and emails, with the help of digital signatures. KEY FEATURES: - The key server can be set to one of the available options, when the service is enabled or disabled by default - Backup keys to file or memory card - Distribution keys to servers for services such as GpgOL (openPGP for Outlook) - Key creation based on a name and email address - Create new key with passphrase, standard, or no passphrase - Personal and secret keys for alias - Various options in the interface for convenience Gpg4win Light Password: If you would like to read other software reviews, download it now from Softonic: There are a lot of reasons to use a VPN, but for most people it boils down to the simple fact that being able to access the Internet from any location, at any time, is a basic right. You shouldn't be made to sit in a tiny concrete box and pay a lot of money for access to what should be freely available to all. On top of that, depending on what country you're using a VPN for that may be illegal, so using it can put you in a bit of a pickle if you're ever in trouble. As far as those worried about their privacy, there are some valid concerns to consider as well: they could be giving up more information than they expected, and using a VPN can actually be rather expensive. What is a VPN? As far as the Internet goes, it's a bit like your house. To be able to get into your house, you need keys - unless it's got a keypad, then you can just press the buttons on the door. If your house isn't close to where you want to go, you have to either find the key, or find a way to get inside using a different method. While the method of entering your house isn't affected by the area in which it's located, the Internet works in much the same way: if you're in a location you're not supposed to be in, you need access to it, and the only way to do that is by logging in to one of the networks provided by your ISP. A Virtual Private Network - or VPN for short - is much like the keys you'd use to get into your house; with a VPN, however
