What's new in Green Phoenix:

If you're flying Frontier Airlines this summer and need something to do on the plane during the quiet periods, the "Star-graded" milefares are the ticket. That's right: A Star-graded ticket allows you to earn miles, and the Star-graded fare is better than the the regular fare. While some Star-grade fares earn "4x" miles (and the 4x miles are more generally available than the normal 5x miles), for purposes of this tutorial, I'll just tell you about a Star-grade fare that can earn 7x miles (the normal 7x miles are clearly only available by booking days in advance!). For the past several years, the Frontier Airlines plan has been offering discounted domestic fares by way of the Frontier On US program. Starting last week, this program has expanded to European destinations as well (it's also online for booking now). This post is part of a series of posts about cruising on Royal Caribbean, I'm going to attempt to share the tips, tricks, and things you need to know to make the most out of your cruise. Traveling with the Queen The majority of Royal Caribbean's Oasis-class ships are built with an architecture which is similar to a much older, bigger and grander cruise line. You can get a sense of this on the graphics of the Oasis class ships: But, one of the huge benefits of cruises on Royal Caribbean's Oasis class ships is that each ship is made up of one of two types of cruise ship, and they can have wildly different cabins. The two types are what Royal Caribbean calls "Grand Class" and "Vista Class". The difference is that in Grand Class your suites don't measure bigger than a normal suite, there's a modest amount of ambient ambience in the suite, but the room feels like a wide suite with as much space as you need to stretch out on a chaise. Meanwhile, in Vista Class, there's loads of space to stretch out, and the room is much more spacious and decorated with what seems like far more shelves and drawers. Royal Caribbean's website has a nice visual comparison of these two ships. Though it's certainly true that there's going to be a massive difference between your room in a Grand Class suite

China is the world's second-largest economy, but it has long struggled to get a good return on its vast investment in technology. But that might be changing. China's government plans to make the country a world leader in artificial intelligence (AI), the rapidly developing computer technology that's quickly reshaping industries like banking, retail, and finance. State-owned tech conglomerate Tsinghua Unigroup is leading the effort, using its capital to invest in research centers, buy up start-ups, and build up a young, creative talent base, the New York Times reported on Tuesday. Tsinghua Unigroup's investments are focused on teaching AI to be more like humans. The New York Times noted that the firm's founders are drawn from an elite group of Chinese high-flyers. China's rapid progress in AI has been boosted by a strong government support behind companies like Tsinghua, says Deepak Gupta, CEO and founder of AT&T Labs and a frequent commentator on the industry. "It is critically important that the government support continued," Gupta tells TechCrunch. "A lot of the issues that are possible in AI development are only possible
