country. "Out-migration" refers to migration with the intention of moving permanently to a new country. The number of older adults (aged 50 and over) is rapidly growing in the developing world. We draw attention to three key elements of hidden costs: social (or psychological), physical and financial. Among the social costs, there is an assumption that migrants bring their culture and family traditions into the receiving country, which can be a source of conflict or frustration for those who wish to live in the country according to its own traditions. Among physical costs, there is increased vulnerability of older adults to health-related risks such as accident, injury, morbidity and mortality. But what of financial costs? In countries of the destination group, migration has a negative impact on the economic
