Hayate is a silent member of Gensokyo's Dead or Alive 5 team. In DEAD OR ALIVE 5 she made her debut as a foil character. She has since appeared in other titles of the DOA franchise. She was also the only character in the series to never be playable in the game main series. Despite this Hayate plays a vital role in the Dead or Alive series, serving as a foil character, an ally character and an enemy character. Hayate is a stereotypical contrast to Kasumi, being a kunoichi that wears a Western-style outfit with a mini skirt or jeans. Hayate's stance is fast and athletic, and her fighting is powerful and composed. Hayate is all about speed and agility, and uses this characteristic to take advantage of enemy weaknesses with her "quick attacks", such as her "Sarashiki Senpukyaku". Hayate will also use her kicks, such as her "Kirisute Gou". Hayate attacks from the rear using the "Tenshou" attack, as well as her "Sankaku Otoshi" attack. Hayate also uses a variety of projectile attacks, such as her "Sokutaku Gedou". Hayate attacks from behind or from the side. Player Tactics: Hayate utilizes these tactics when approaching a group of enemies: - As enemies are approaching, Hayate attacks weakly at first. - The attack leads enemies into a corner, where Hayate easily controls them. - As enemies become exhausted, Hayate follows with a hard attack. This will render the enemy slower, so she can gain the upper hand. - Hayate attacks weaker enemies first. Since she is fast, they are no match for her. - If the battle is too intense, Hayate pulls away and makes them chase her. - Hayate goes back to the weaker attacks, and attacks the enemy weakly so they'll have the patience to fight her. The first time Hayate approaches a group of enemies, she will attack with her "Tenshou" attack. This attack deals damage from the front. But if enemies follow her attack, she will add the "Kirisute Gou". This attack deals damage from behind. Hayate's attacks can easily take out enemies in one shot. Hayate will utilize these types of attacks from the start of the

.html Q: SQL Server 2000 - Retrieving results from a clustered index scan I have a set of data (let's imagine 4000+ rows of data) that is stored in a SQL Server 2000 database. The data in question is stored on a clustered index. My question is, that if I was to call the SQL Server to get all the data for one of the columns (let's imagine I only had a single column), would it execute a clustered index seek or would it execute a clustered index scan? A: Set the db_is_table_scanned parameter to 1 on your select statement. The db_is_table_scanned parameter indicates whether a clustered or nonclustered index is scanned. The default value of the db_is_table_scanned parameter is 0, which indicates that a nonclustered index is not scanned. Note that it is the default value as well that's why the documentation says "default value" not "default 1". I'm not sure what this means exactly, but it may be a hint that it is meant to be "never". If db_is_table_scanned returns 1 it means a clustered index scan is performed.

When the time comes for a showing or diagnostic work up, it is rare in the North American veterinary community that the newly diagnosed dog (and cat) would require more tests than just a physical and simple blood test. But, unfortunately, this can be the result of a lack of education in veterinary medicine and of advertising companies and insurance and health insurance providers, who can have a reactionary marketing strategy that typically advocates a minimum of diagnostic tests. We are constantly hearing “our patients have a good chance of being well, if the owner agrees to put the time and money into diagnostic testing” and “we encourage the clients of our practice to do the appropriate tests for their specific condition, for diagnosing the condition before they cost their practice or make their insurance provider $$$$.” So, before you agree to unnecessary tests for your (or your dog’s) newly diagnosed condition, think about your options. As a student of veterinary medicine, you should at least acknowledge that many conditions have a “point of no return” and while many conditions can be treated if diagnosed early, the trend has been to use more diagnostic testing (which is high in cost), and unnecessary tests, so that

Raven is a classic Real-time Strategy (RTS) game with a unique set of gameplay elements. It combines the classic RTS gameplay with some of the best elements from First-Person Shooters, RPG and other genres, together with an original narrative and unique world design. Gameplay: Your main goal in the game is to take over the enemy base in the form of a Raven - the boss character of the storyline. You will need to destroy all enemy and incubators (AI controlled units) defending it and take the base for yourself. During the game you will also encounter enemies and craft your own weapons and equipment. -A powerful attack system: Move to an enemy, aim a weapon and attack. This gives you the feeling of a very cool sniper game. -Multiplayer is supported by a single controller, or two controllers in the case of two players. -A soundtrack filled with original music. -Visuals: Raven looks like a beautiful hardboiled noir-like 2D graphic adventure in a dark city and it uses different unique game mechanics, such as a unique inventory-system and unique and powerful weapons.

Q: Accessing a click event in an iframe with javascript I'm trying to build a voting app on a website and as I do I realized that the iframe I have was still capable of using some JavaScript (which means only the parent can read it). Is there a way I can detect that a specific pixel is clicked on the iframe? I've tried the following and I'm not getting any useful information and I'm assuming if I call it from the parent it works, but I'd prefer to go the latter option since it's only a small test app. `document.getElementById("test"+i).addEventListener('click',function(){ alert('hello'); });` I've tried a lot of things and nothing is working. I've even tried copying an ID and changing it from i to something else just to test it and it didn't work. Is there a way to do this or do I have to use something else? A: If you have access to the code of the iframe, you can use your own answer. If you have an other way to access the iframe, you can use `document.active`
