targeting specifically the activation-competent T-cell receptor/CD3 complex using monoclonal antibodies. We have constructed and characterized monoclonal antibodies (mAbs) to the T-cell receptor (TCR)/CD3 complex. One mAb that targets the human TCR alpha/beta delta subunits is the least likely to affect T-cell function or proliferation. The closely related TCR alpha/beta gamma subunits are not recognized by this mAb. It is likely that the corresponding murine mAb recognizes similar structures on the murine TCR gamma and delta chains. Most of the other mAbs are specific for either alpha or beta components of the TCR/CD3 complex and inhibit a series of T-

Scleroderma renal crisis: A recognized cause of acute renal failure. Although the mesangial sclerosis that characterizes scleroderma renal crisis (SRC) has been well-established in patients with diffuse scleroderma, the literature has not previously reported that SRC may be a cause of acute renal failure in patients with limited scleroderma. Renal biopsies from eight patients with limited scleroderma who developed SRC were reviewed. There were five women and three men. The age of the patients ranged from 22 to 63 years. The interval between the onset of scleroderma and the development of SRC ranged from 1 to 30 years. All patients had underlying systemic hypertension and proteinuria before the development of SRC. Eight of the nine patients required dialysis for the treatment of renal failure. All biopsies contained intense mesangial deposits of immune complexes. In all patients with SRC, the clinical course was marked by the absence of a rise in serum creatinine and a rapid decline in serum creatinine level. We believe that SRC is a recognized cause of acute renal failure in patients with limited scleroderma.: 517-524. Kain, David (1990). Testimony that was given on March 20, 2019 in New Jersey, United States before the House Committee on Homeland Security. This video is copyrighted material and the unauthorized dissemination, duplication, or reproduction of this material, in whole or in part, is prohibited under applicable law including copyright law. This is a recorded testimony given by William V. Wagner, acting deputy commissioner for the New Jersey Department of Public Safety and Homeland Security, at an April 9, 2007 hearing in Trenton, New Jersey, USA. The video was obtained by TSMV and was given on March 20, 2019. On March 20, 2007, William Wagner stated that there were no alternatives to detecting whether a firearm is loaded before firing it. He also claimed that the technology presently used is not accurate enough, and that such technology is still under development. Addendum: After watching this video, we are wondering if Mr. Wagner had a copy of the Corrective Action Report that was presented to the court for approval on March 23, 2017. Also, we looked up the link to the Corrective Action Report that was presented to the court on March 23, 2017. We found a PDF file. However, Mr. Wagner in this video does not know what type of firearm is under inspection. He also does not mention a type of firearm when referring to a “patent pending” and “patent issued” technology. He refers to that technology as a “type of” technology. He states that there is a “patent pending” and a “patent issued” technology, which makes it sound as if he referred to a technology that has been developed by either a government agency or a private company. Upon viewing this “Pat
