To The Pawn A huge hole is growing in the center of the Earth. They cannot predict how deep it will get, but the sink slowly draws more and more water towards the center of the Earth. The water is in constant motion, always moving, but the course of it is not obvious. The water courses to the east. Then the water courses to the north. The water at first flows steadily downhill, yet as it reaches the bottom, it becomes stagnant. If you were to climb down, you would see a glittering, red and orange mud at the center of the Earth. The water flows to the west, and then back to the east. It takes several thousand years for the water to make its way back. The water is slow to return, and so the hole grows bigger and bigger. Now, a baby is born. He is a very small baby, but he can do things no one else can. He finds a way to get out. He climbs out of the hole that is forming under the Earth's surface. He can climb the sides of the hole easily. The sides are very smooth, like marble. He sees the water flow back towards the center of the Earth. He realizes that he will soon be joining the water flow that is flowing back to the center of the earth. He quickly climbs back out the hole that he came out of. He notices that he is still in the same world he grew up in. He sees some people around him, and they are looking for their next meal. He asks them where he is, and they respond that he is in Canada. He wonders if they are telling the truth, and if so, why they would lie about his location. They tell him, "You are the cause of all the evil and disease in this world. You are a menace to life and you must be stopped." The baby now has a purpose in b7e8fdf5c8
