The disruption affects around 200,000 passengers over five days. The airline's website has said that the Boeing 777 aircraft has been forced to turn back from Russia. Virgin has said that passengers affected would be contacted by email. Some 3,000 staff at Virgin's Gatwick base are to be out of work until at least the end of the week. Andrew Henderson, a spokesman for the union Unite, called for immediate action: "To prevent further damage to staff, the immediate needs of our members have to be considered. "The management must now devise a plan to make sure all staff are paid for the time they will be away from work and decide on the best way to return to work for our members." 'Stay where you are' One British politician said it was important to help people who were at Gatwick Airport. Labour MP Keith Vaz said: "I want to pay tribute to all the passengers who are at Gatwick Airport and who have been affected by this. "The British Ambassador in Moscow is the right person to help people. He should immediately contact these passengers and personally reassure them that they are not in any danger. ♦

To evaluate the effect of early access to a self-management support programme on the self-management of patients with chronic illness. Early access to a self-management support programme was tested in a randomized controlled trial with 330 patients. The target group was newly referred patients with chronic illness. The experimental group received self-management support in a care group, and the control group received support in a standard group. The following outcome measures were used: (1) illness perceptions (validated by the Illness Perception Questionnaire) and (2) quality of life (Health-Related Quality of Life). The internal consistency of the measures was sufficient ($\alpha>0.80$). Baseline scores did not differ between the groups. A significant effect of condition was found on illness perceptions and quality of life. Post hoc analyses revealed that the effect of condition on self-management was significant for those in the experimental group with more intensive contact with health professionals. Health professionals should pay more attention to early access to self-management support programmes.Q: Allow auto-completion in Visual Studio Code in Typescript I'm using the "typescript" plugin for Visual Studio Code. When editing a ts file and I hit CTRL-SPACE I can't use auto-completion on the arguments to a function. It works when I edit a.js file, but not.ts files. I'm using the latest vscode-typescript version node --version v9.4.1 npm --version 3.10.10 osx 10.10.5 typescript --version 3.4.0 typings - version 2.2.1 typings
