Martin O'Neill, Alan Bennett, and Adam Faith are backing efforts to raise awareness of 'the success factories' of Britain. The DIY Network has named 'the success factories' of Britain. In a video for DIY magazine, a number of established stars talk about what an industrious nation the UK is. The three-man panel include comedy actor and singer Alan Bennett, 60, TV presenter and motor show presenter Adam Faith, 56, and football pundit Martin O'Neill, 43. Alan Bennett said: "In business, Britain is the success factory. We can do it. It's just that it's a matter of going and learning, testing out and giving it your best shot. That's how you do it." Mark Charnley, managing director of the DIY Network, said: "This is all about the UK being the success factory, whether you like it or not. "The question is where did that success go? "We are in a period of economic growth but these success factories have been replaced by supermarket trolleys on many of the high streets." When told that there are 55,000 empty shops in Britain, he said: "That represents lost economic potential." "If you want to get jobs, you need to produce goods. You need to have your success factories," said Martin O'Neill. "I've always known that but I think there is a danger that we're reluctant to accept the fact. "To let go and accept there will be jobs loss because of those success factories isn't acceptable. "But it's part of creating jobs." The BBC Radio 2 presenter added that we can't live in a society where no one works, no one makes money, and all people do is go on benefits. He added: "It's about reducing that dependency so that we can produce for ourselves." BBC presenter and comedian Adam Faith revealed that he learnt to be innovative and entrepreneurial in school. He said: "I really didn't want to start no business. I wanted to play football, go out for a walk. "I went to the advice teacher and said '

Kinship (band) Kinship is a heavy metal band from the Netherlands. Their music is a cross of melodic death metal and progressive metal. Their style was heavily influenced by the band Aeternus. They have released two full-length albums (1982 and 1988) and two EP's (1987 and 1992). Biography History Kinship was formed in 1982 by the brothers Jan and Pete Franken and their friend Flip Koppenburg. They were soon joined by drummer Kees Wisselink and, in the years that followed, bassist Lex S. Wouters and guitarist Alex Vogel. In 1987 Kinship released their first EP, A Life Lesson through Morbid Records, which included five tracks. The EP was a success in the Netherlands and was followed by a full-length album and another EP. Kinship's second album, 1988's Bitter Taste of Victory, was again released through Morbid Records. This album was the band's first in the USA. It was released in America after being championed by the band's fan club, the Lint! label. The band soon signed to the label in the USA, and their following album 1989's World of Pain was released in America by Lint! as well as in Europe by the band's own Acrosound label. The next album, 1992's In Our Blood, was recorded at The Compound and Battery Studios in the Netherlands. Both The Compound and Battery Studios were specifically designed for recording acoustic instruments. Kinship recorded the new album in a style which was a direct result of this process. These songs were recorded on what is known as a "basement layering board" with a studio sized, completely acoustic guitar. The album received excellent reviews and was well received by the public. In October 2010 Kinship released their next album, Cultivation, featuring singles "Our Eternity" and "The Reflection". In April 2013, the band announced their third studio album, Earthly Joy, will be released on CD in early September 2014. A special live DVD of the band's performance at Rock in Rio Festival in November 2012 was released for free in July 2013. The DVD contains live footage from the 15th Anniversary tour of 2012. Musical style Kinship's style has been compared to that of Aeternus, Death, Laceration, and Darkthrone. Kinship's songwriting
