A typical A/D converter of the successive approximation type can provide a conversion speed of one Mhz or less. But if the reference voltage of the comparator is designed to be high enough to cut down the errors at the subsequent stages of the conversion, the conversion speed of the A/D converter may be limited to about one Mhz.The present invention relates to an apparatus for supporting and stabilizing glass sheets in a wide variety of processing operations. More particularly, the present invention relates to an improved handling and supporting apparatus for glass sheets which has special utility in the manufacture of thermally insulating glass sheets for use in motor vehicles. Heretofore, glass sheets such as glass sheets used as windshields, side windows and the like in motor vehicles, have been heated and bent by being processed on a generally horizontal support surface located in a glass sheet heating chamber. In one of the more typical operations for supporting and heating glass sheets, the glass sheets are moved along a path of travel through the heating chamber until the glass sheets are supported by and in contact with a horizontal, generally U-shaped support means. The support means is adapted to move a pair of spaced-apart glass sheets in a horizontal direction toward and away from a

was modified by removing the initial string of knobs and piano wire at the bottom of the huskhound (right). It was reconfigured to fit under the sink and replaced the original glass collector. The unit was mounted at the same level as the client's stove and drain rack. The Kitchen Wear Is Coming at You! Like I said, I was able to put all my 5 years worth of professional experience to work on the job. I had a view of the project from the get go and was able to see the tough spots that were needing to be changed. During the painting phase, I made a few mistakes and called my client back to detail how I was going to fix it. Finally, the project was completed and it was a success. The client was completely satisfied and happy about the job I did. Lynnwood Resident >>After all the hard work and sweat (literally) I put in on my own project, I decided to call in a professional service provider to make sure everything was flowing properly. While I diligently tested, inspected, measured, and replaced one item after another, I noticed that the sinks still hadn't been installed yet, requiring me to return several more times to give them a final lookover. The project manager assured me that they would be installed in the next day (maybe tomorrow) and that I had nothing to worry about. He wasn't lying, but he was way off from reality. He didn't let me know that two of the sinks wouldn't be installed for two months after the job. I ended up having to call everyday to find out whether the sink has been installed or not and several times had to repair leaking pipes myself before the jobs were done. The sink was installed and leaking like it was never installed and was a complete disappointment to my experience. I am a professional and responsible homeowner, but that job turned me into an amateur. I learned a lot the hard way. Preparation at the Comfort Inn I arrived at the Comfort Inn and was provided a room directly at the end of the corridor on the fourth floor. There was a sign on the door that says "Occupants Handy Pipes Only". There were at least five rooms along the corridor and I assumed the other rooms were in use. I called the guy a little before 5am to announce my arrival, but he didn't answer his phone. So, I unlocked the door myself and moved to my room. I located the waste pipe in the
