Taking Your Best Shot with the Camera Most digital cameras have a built-in, or built-in, memory card slot that can be used to store the photos from your sessions (figure 1.3).

Figure 1-3: Your digital camera can be the storage medium of choice, providing you have a USB port on your computer.

After you take your photos, be sure to copy or e-mail them to yourself so you can refer to them later if you need to make any corrections or enhancements. It's much easier to correct an image if you can still look at the image that you're working on, which is stored on a memory card or hard drive.

## Dealing with Your

Camera As I note throughout this book, your camera has a camera-

---

specific menu that enables you to easily access most of the features. You can customize a camera's menu (refer to Figure 1-2) by tapping the desired function; and the camera not only lets you make a desired setting on the fly, but also remembers it for future use. For example, when you save a new image and click the Set button in the Control Strip to set the white balance, you've just made a _one-time_ setting that applies to all the images you take with that camera in that series of shots. You can set specific camera settings for separate photo sessions by setting a preferred _exposure mode_ (such as auto, aperture priority, or shutter priority) and other settings such as ISO, white balance, and so on. I discuss those settings in the later sections of this chapter. If you use a specific setting for a shoot, you can save that setting and use it again during future shots without going into the Camera Setup screen. For example, suppose that you autoexpose the photo automatically for every shooting session, and you want to slow down the shutter speed so that you can get more action in your shots. You could set the preference `_automatically_expose_` to the Auto option in the Camera Setup (see

---

---

---

Figure 1-4); then you won't need to use the Western District of Oklahoma, sitting by designation 1 Section 17.6.1 provides: If any person shall be found guilty of any acts of commission or omission complained of in any complaint, affidavit or information filed pursuant to this section, judgment shall be entered by the court or the magistrate against such person in the amount of not less than the jurisdictional limit set for the offense for which the person was found guilty nor more than the jurisdictional limit set for the offense for which the person was found guilty, as the case may be, at the time of such conviction. 2 Defendants also argued that by submitting an affidavit of indigency, the present criminal charges against the defendants should be stayed pending the outcome of this litigation. The magistrate rejected this contention 3 The magistrate characterized the limitation of the receipt of payment to the jurisdictional limits as a "lack of jurisdiction on the part of the City to file the bond," after finding that any jurisdiction with which the municipality was clothed was to the exclusion of whatever power of the state. The magistrate, however, declined to rule whether the state courts have jurisdiction. We need not reach this issue since we determine that the magistrate lacked authority to dismiss the criminal proceeding

Assessment of a new polymerase chain reaction assay for diagnosis of pediatric and adult Burkholderia cepacia complex infections.

Burkholderia cepacia complex is an important cause of healthcare-associated nosocomial infection. Rapid and accurate diagnosis of these infections is essential to ensure prompt implementation of infection control measures and effective patient treatment. Polymerase chain reaction (PCR) has recently been identified as a useful method for rapid and accurate diagnosis of B. cepacia complex. This study prospectively compared the results of a new, automated PCR technique with those of conventional methods for the diagnosis of B. cepacia complex infection in adult and pediatric patients. Inclusion criteria were admission to an acute care, non-intensive care facility, bloodstream infection due to B. cepacia, and inpatient antibiotic therapy initiated within 4 days of the blood culture draw. Blood cultures were inoculated into a B. cepacia-selective broth, a

---
