Zach Parise and Ryan Suter, the best forwards on the New Jersey Devils' roster entering the 2012-13 season, announced Thursday they will remain together next season, agreeing to a four-year, $28 million contract extension that keeps them in a Devils uniform through the 2021-22 campaign. Selected first and second overall by the Devils in the 2008 NHL Entry Draft, Parise will earn $11.75 million annually beginning with the 2013-14 season, and Suter will make $10 million over the first three years of his deal. Following a June 21 meeting between Parise and Suter and Devils General Manager Lou Lamoriello in Carpinteria, California, Lamoriello told ESPNNewYork.com that he expected the two would agree to stay together. Parise and Suter met July 9 in Arizona, where they and Lamoriello had a lengthy meeting to iron out the final details of their contract extension. "We've grown as players from those first couple of years. We've really grown together. We have a great camaraderie," Parise told reporters Thursday at the Devils' practice facility. "We've improved as players together. We're getting better together. I think the fans are going to notice the improvement." Parise, 24, and Suter, 26, are closing in on the halfway point of their new contracts. They would become unrestricted free agents after the 2013-14 season. "Zach and Ryan have always been good teammates," Devils captain Andy Greene told ESPNNewYork.com. "They respect the other's game. They aren't afraid to put in their own shots. When they're on their game, they're like a couple of second-line centers, they're so hard to play against." Parise, the Devils' No. 1 center, produced 48 points (23 goals, 25 assists) in 50 games last season,
