(ARCU-C), said that the shift from black-tailed and whitetailed raccoons to more invasive “flat-tailed” raccoons was exacerbating some of the infections attributed to vandalism and use of crop chemicals.

In the past, most of the damage from the raccoons came from human interactions with them. However, they’re gaining ground in the past couple of months. “We are the first to admit that we’re not experts on raccoons and plague, but the virus we found when we tested the raccoons was similar to a farmer’s 2009 plague,” Flanagan said.

Local neighborhoods in spring are the favorite time for “bedroom raccoons” to prepare for the long cold winter ahead. Flanagan said the raccoons coming to Austin this winter are the “flat-tailed” variety, which can be distinguished from “black-tailed” raccoons.

Flanagan said that the flat-tails are more inquisitive and less content to stay to the warm confines of a barn. They follow farmers into their homes and crops and, if nothing else is available to them, they will dig through garbage for food. Additionally, if people leave food out, the raccoons will follow them home and steal it. Flat-tail raccoons are also known to leave fecal piles everywhere. Pigs,
