Among the nominees is "American Experience," which earned this category at the Creative Arts Emmy Awards in July. And PBS says, as usual, that unless the Academy has changed its eligibility guidelines, a production has to be broadcast in the United States on commercial television to be eligible. "Nature" has been consistently one of PBS' most popular series since it started in 1993. "Nature" has also been nominated for its feature film, "A River Dark and Deep," which won the World Cinema Documentary Award at the Sundance Film Festival. This year's nominations will be announced on June 21. Share Email 0

In a nursing career the most widely used fluoroscope is probably one of the first examples of a medical imaging device and medicine. It is a non-ionizing radiation ion detector designed to show the presence of radiation in a patient. One of the most important advances in radiology was the development of the fluoroscope. Everyone is familiar with the image they see on the screens of a fluoroscope. The pictures can be imaged at any spot on the patient and the resulting picture can be either hard copy film or electronic on a video monitor. The fluoroscope is basically the combination of an x-ray generator and a fluorescent screen.

The fluoroscope image displays the outlines of the various areas of the patient. It is used to detect the presence of foreign material, like shrapnel in a wound or bullets in the body. The fluoroscope also provides the physician with information on the position and shape of a bone and the condition of joints. [RADIOLOGY Radiology Radiology ZigZag Philosophy By 1895, x-ray technology was being adapted for medical and dental imaging. The very first commercial use of x-rays was in dentistry in 1896 when Dr. Theodore Ziegler began experimenting with a mercury-x-ray tube. Among the first major uses of x-rays were dental applications. In 1896 Dr. W.W. Armstrong developed an x-ray machine for use in dentistry. Very early x-ray machines were based on Einstein's discovery of the photoelectric effect. The first practical use of x-rays was to expose photographic plates to a radiation field. In 1898, Dr. Elmer McCollum was the first person to use x-rays for medical imaging. Using x-rays, he applied them to the eyes of two patients. One of the patients recovered from a lost eye, the other from a cataract. He continued to use x-rays for imaging and dentistry applications. In 1895, the Prussian physicist Wilhelm Conrad Röntgen discovered the phenomenon that came to be known as x-ray, which consists of a beam of energy impinging on a material, and exciting the electrons within that material and producing a characteristic x-ray. An image can be created on a fluorescent plate when x-rays impinge upon the plate which is coated with a phosphor material. X-rays are high-energy ionizing radiation that has a very short wavelength of approximately 0.01 nanometers. X-rays penetrate
