Well, that was a nice start. I don't think his back surgery will hold him back from a full schedule. However, I can't really fault the Giants for the log jam at backup linebacker. I personally would have gone 4-2-5 right now, but how this moves depends on what happens in the draft. I'd like to see the Giants address the position in the draft. I think there are no position battles really. Measurables are hard to hide talent. Do we really think Merling was supposed to be the starter? Of course not, he started the season with the second string because of his play. The reason he started so long when he wasn't supposed to be the starter is because Greene got hurt early. I think the roster at position is what we should be pleased with, no one really knows if anyone is going to be able to step up

The value of conventional serum tests in the diagnosis of pleural effusions is limited. To improve specificity, determination of carcinoembryonic antigen (CEA) in pleural fluid would be useful. CEA concentrations in 283 pleural effusions were determined by enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay. The results were compared with conventional tests and with cytologic examination of the effusion. All conventional tests, except the glucose level, were significantly different in tuberculous compared with malignant effusions. CEA had a sensitivity of 0.81 and a specificity of 0.88 for tuberculous effusions, and positive and negative predictive values of 0.83 and 0.92, respectively. The corresponding values for the cytologic examination were 0.63 and 0.89. The sensitivity and specificity of CEA in distinguishing between tuberculous and malignant effusions were comparable to those of the routine tests. CEA in pleural fluid seems to be a useful marker in the diagnosis of tuberculous effusions.
