This question has been marked as a duplicate of another question, but the user who marked it as such has not written a satisfactory answer (most of their comments are insincere and too vague to qualify as an answer). In fact, their answer actually doesn't work with the linked question at all, since it is related to HTML where the linked question is related to LaTeX. Specifically, the answer has two major problems: It doesn't address the question correctly in any way (this is why it does not work). It does not even attempt to give any indication of why it doesn't work, so you can't really use it. A: Surveying And Levelling By Kanetkar And Kulkarni Pdf 12. If this is your question, you need to post the code you are actually running, not an image of it. Please include what you have tried and the exact error message you are getting. Otherwise it is assumed that you haven't posted anything. I have my complete.tex document ready on my system. I just want to execute the.tex file. You don't need to post the entire source, that's how text editors work. You should have an editor open with your document in it, so you can just click the "run" button (assuming it is available). You can also open the file in a browser, but you can't post pictures of the browser. They are a long set of formulas and I can't run it through the software in my university It is assumed that you can run the code. It's a long chain of equations and references to formulas that are not explained in the document You need to post the.tex file in question here. In other words, you must run the.tex file. Thanks for the reply. Sorry for the misunderstanding. It is a very long math chain of equations with different notations. Here's the latex file. You need to post the latex code, not an image of it. This is supposed to be a markdown file. Ignoring this. Basically, I just want to be able to run it on my system using any.tex file. You don't need to post the entire source, that's how text editors work. You should have an editor open with your document in it, so you can just click the "run"
