the chronic pain state as potential deep brain stimulation targets. Anatomy records from June 2009 to May 2016 were obtained from the Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. Patients with history of deep brain stimulation for the treatment of chronic pain and who had a subdural or epidural venous lake identified on a magnetic resonance imaging scan as part of their preoperative evaluation were included in the study. A total of 26 patients were identified who had a subdural or epidural venous lake and who underwent deep brain stimulation treatment. Twenty-two patients (85%) had undergone previous intervention for pain control. There were 18 patients with a history of spinal cord stimulation and 8 patients with failed spinal cord stimulations. The locations of the venous lakes were as follows: lumbar: 11 (42%), thoracic: 5 (19%), cephalad: 4 (15%), and lumbosacral: 1 (4%). The most common indication for deep brain stimulation included low back pain (69%), failed spinal cord stimulations (38%), and pain due to brachial plexus avulsion (15%). Thirteen patients had higher thoracic localization of the venous lake, and 13 had lumbar localization. None of the patients had an epidural venous lake
