keygen.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to surgical devices and methods for treating female urinary incontinence, and more specifically, to the diagnosis and treatment of stress urinary incontinence using a unique artificial sphincter mechanism. 2. Description of the Related Art Female incontinence is a common occurrence. It is estimated that nearly one-third of all women at some point in their lives suffers from stress urinary incontinence, frequently because of childbirth. SUI results from muscle damage in the supporting structures of the pelvis and is due to loss of pelvic muscle tone and/or overactive bladder muscle function. Stress urinary incontinence, which is a functional incontinence, may present itself in different ways and in varying degrees of severity. Stress incontinence is an involuntary loss of urine that occurs during coughing, sneezing, laughing, or other physical activities that involve forceful muscular contraction of the detrusor muscle. Males also suffer from urinary incontinence resulting from damage to the muscle structures of the bladder or the urethra, or from bladder cancer. Male urinary incontinence is rare, but symptoms of stress incontinence or overflow incontinence may occasionally be present. Treatment of female incontinence may involve the correction of anatomical defects. Current treatment of female urinary incontinence has focused on the use of intravaginal support devices or pessaries. Pessaries are limited to external support, and are not effective in treating most types of incontinence. Another device for treatment of incontinence involves the implantation of a spring based artificial sphincter. The artificial sphincter is adapted to be implanted around the base of the urethra and is provided with a one-way valve so that the urethra and bladder cannot empty. The 6d1f23a050
