The patent wars between Apple and Samsung have taken their final turn with Apple bringing a new countersuit against Samsung. The iPhone and iPad maker accuses Samsung of lying about how its devices work, which Apple claims allows Samsung to "steal iPhone features" and at the same time protect its own products. Apple first sued Samsung for patents relating to the design and manufacture of the iPhone in 2010 and accused

Samsung of copying the design, functionality, and look of the iPhone. Both companies are now engaged in a case before the U.S. International Trade Commission over claims the other makes infringing patents. A patent infringement case before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, which is separate from the ITC case, could also shake up the Samsung vs. Apple case. Apple isn't talking publicly, but it did recently make a small comment. "Samsung had to sign a license in 2009 agreeing to stop infringing Apple's patents," Apple's iPhone patents attorney Michael Bromwich stated. "It was not a true license that was typical in license agreements, rather a binder Samsung signed where it stipulated it would stop infringing Apple patents by certain date." In an interview, Bromwich said, "So we sued. Our position is Samsung's infringement of our patents resulted in consumer confusion and ruined Apple's products." The negative impact on Apple's reputation is the single biggest harm that these alleged patent infringements have caused, Bromwich stated. "It's the single biggest impact on Apple's reputation. That's not something you can give to somebody else."

Samsung's response is to argue that
