She is best known as the first official artist for the Australian space agency, the Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organisation (CSIRO). Smith and three other artists were commissioned by CSIRO to paint the ten-metre wide front window of its headquarters in Parkes, and the three women worked for over two years on the project. They painted a five-metre high abstract image on a translucent, acrylic glass pane. The images were inspected for safety and then chemically washed. Smith completed her image on the fourth day of the project, when the pane had been heated and cooled to room temperature several times. The mural was unveiled on 21 September 1981. In 2015, Smith and the three other women that had painted the mural were among four women artists who were recognised for their works by the National Gallery of Australia.
