No one was injured in the July 7 rocket attack, a U.S. Defense Department spokesman said. The U.S.-led coalition told the Iraqi military and border guards to clear a buffer zone around the test range used by Iraqi and American troops. The air space over the zone, about a half-mile in diameter, was temporarily closed to the public, said Army Lt. Col. Steven Warren, a spokesman in Baghdad. "An artillery unit fired on the dump truck," Warren said. "There were some hits on the dump truck that didn't cause any immediate damage." The rocket attack occurred when a U.S. Patriot missile battery was conducting a live fire exercise, according to a Pentagon statement. During the exercise, when the U.S. forces fired dozens of projectiles at the dump truck, the truck detonated. Video released by the Defense Department showed a burning wreckage in a hillside. The thick smoke from the blast could be seen for miles. No Americans or Iraqis were injured in the attack, Warren said.Q: SimpleCal
